

PET FOOD RECALL

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has announced a voluntary recall of certain cat foods manufactured by Diamond Pet Foods for Premium Edge. The affected brands were found to contain an inadequate level of Thiamine, which may cause clinical signs of thiamine deficiency in cats eating this food. Symptoms displayed by an affected cat may include wobbly walking or muscle weakness, paralysis of the hindlimbs, seizures, ventroflexion (bending towards the floor) of the neck and abnormal eye movement. If your veterinarian diagnoses that your cat has become ill from consuming the affected pet food, ask your veterinarian to file a report with FDA.

Diamond Pet Foods has issued a voluntary recall on the following date codes of Premium Edge Finicky Adult Cat Food and Premium Edge Hairball Cat Food: RAF0501A22X 18lb., RAF0501A2X 6 lb., RAH0501A22X 18lb., and RAH0501A2X 6lb. The date of manufacture is May 28, 2009.

All retail outlets shipped the above lots have been contacted and the affected products have been pulled off the shelves. Retailers have been asked to contact their customers via email or telephone, however, if you have these date codes of Premium Edge Cat Food, return the product to your retailer.

The company tested the product and found no contaminants in the cat food; however, the cat foods were deficient in thiamine.
