Ashuwillticook Rail Trail

DCR Massachusetts

Welcome to the Ashuwillticook Rail Trail. The trail is a former railroad corridor, now converted into a paved 10-foot-wide, 11-mile-long, universally accessible path.

It is part of the Massachusetts State Parks, and runs parallel to Route 8 through the towns of Cheshire, Lanesborough and Adams.

The Trail's gentle grade and smooth surface create perfect conditions for cyclists, skaters, walkers, runners, and cross-country skiers of all ages and abilities.

The Ashuwillticook Rail Trail stretches from the southernmost entrance of the Berkshire Mall in Lanesborough to the center of Adams.

The word Ashuwillticook (ash-oo-WILL-ti-cook) is from the Native American name for the south branch of the Hoosic River and literally means "at the in-between pleasant river," or in common tongue, "the pleasant river in between the hills." The name was adopted for the trail as a way to reconnect people to local history and the natural environment.

Volunteers Welcome

History of the Rail Corridor

In 1845, the Pittsfield & North Adams Railroad developed this corridor with the goal of extending the Housatonic Railroad north to Rutland, Vermont. While the track was under construction, the company was acquired by the Western Railroad, which used the corridor as a secondary line.

In 1867, the Western Railroad became known as the Boston & Albany Railroad. During this time, mineral traffic developed on the line and a number of limestone operations went into business. The New York Central took over the B&A Railroad in 1900, and upgraded the line.

New York Central became part of Penn-Central (later Conrail) in 1970 and sold the line to Boston & Maine Railroad in 1981.

Boston & Maine Railroad ran the line as a connection to an existing track in North Adams, with declining success until the company abandoned rail service in 1990.

Seeing the potential for recreational use of the corridor, citizens organized to preserve the right-of-way. The Ashuwillticook River Trail Committee soon formed and worked to gain the local and political support needed to make this rail trail a reality.
