Charles River, Boston
Courtesy of Katharine Lange
Charles River
Courtesy of Ralph Abele

Weston
wetland plants typically submerged high and dry

Lasell Boathouse in Newton
Floating dock is perched on land.
Motley Pond,
Charles River,
Dedham
Courtesy of Ana Hutker
Orange buoy is on dry land.
Fuller Brook, Wellesley

Courtesy of Turnaround-Films.com
Charles River, aerial view, Millennium Park, Boston

courtesy of Turnaround-Films.com
Ware River, Gibbs Crossing, Ware
courtesy of Keith Davies
Parker River, Georgetown
Courtesy of George Comiskey
“Substantial sections of the riverbed are starting to emerge, an unusual sight.

The flow rate of the Merrimack, as measured in Lowell, is currently at ~23% of the average for this time of year.

(The average flow for this date, based on 100 years of measurements, is 3,320 CFS. It is currently 758 CFS.)”
Lawrence, Merrimack River
Courtesy of Jonathan Guzman
Martins Brook, North Reading
Courtesy of Nishan Bilazarian
Ipswich River, North Reading
Courtesy of Judy Schneider
Ipswich River, Hamilton
Courtesy of Donna Bambury
Potter Brook, Ipswich
Courtesy of Judy Schneider
Ipswich River, Middleton
Courtesy of Judy Schneider
Ipswich River, Middleton
Courtesy of Judy Schneider
Third Herring Brook, Norwell

Courtesy of Turnaround-Films.com