

Dear DOER,

My comments are general rather than aimed specifically at the edits in the current rules.

I installed Solar panels a year ago last September with the expectation of a floor price of $300/SREC. However, my broker, SREC trade encouraged me to sell for less than the floor price simply because no one knew what was going to happen given the oversupply.

The overly complex nature of the system with its long lag time until SRECs are minted and my newly discovered downside risk has disappointed me. It rubs salt in the wound when the governor et. al. go around patting themselves on the back about how good a job they've done promoting solar. Oversupply may be good for the planet, but not for those of us who stepped up and put our money behind this effort to decarbonize our energy infrastructure.

Dan Albert
58 Leicester Road
Marblehead

my site: <http://www.solrenview.com/SolrenView/mainFr.php?siteId=502>