Background: In New England, many working families and individuals simply do not have access to jobs that allow them to meet their basic needs, thrive in the pursuit of economic mobility, and actively contribute to our collective prosperity. The economic well-being of the region is reliant on the ability to focus on the number of jobs created, as well as focus on the number of good-quality jobs for all workers.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston will bring together thought leaders from the business, academic, nonprofit, and public sectors for a half-day conference to explore the challenges and opportunities associated with providing better quality jobs in the local economy.

Attendees will experience enriching conversation that highlights on-the-ground practices and strategies that businesses, investors, policymakers and workforce organizations are pursuing to address the challenges facing low- and moderate-income workers and improve the quality of jobs available in New England communities.
