Did You Know....

One in 5 adults in the U.S. will experience a mental health condition.

Mental illness is common and widespread. You probably know someone with a mental health condition and don't even realize it.

Nearly 1 in 25 adults in America live with a serious mental illness that interferes with or limits one or more major life activities. Serious mental illnesses include, and are not limited to, schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, major depression, and anxiety disorders.

50% of all lifetime cases of mental illness begin by age 14 and 75% by the age 24.

Even very young children may show early warning signs of mental health concerns. These mental health problems are often clinically diagnosable, and can be a product of the interaction of biological, psychological, and social factors.

The vast majority of people with mental health problems are no more likely to be violent than anyone else.

Most people with mental illness are not violent and only 3%–5% of violent acts can be attributed to individuals living with a serious mental illness. In fact, people with severe mental illnesses are over 10 times more likely to be victims of violent crime than the general population.

Approximately 10.2 million adults in the United States have co-occurring mental health and addiction disorders. People with mental health disorders are more likely than people without mental health disorders to experience an alcohol or substance use disorder. People with co-occurring disorders are best served through integrated treatment.
