Statement of Interest

People are often surprised when I tell them that my decision to go to law school had nothing to do with the potential for "big law firm" money. Instead, since the 2016 election, I have viewed the law as the area in which my skills can best be utilized to serve my community. To the extent to which I've had one in my 26 years, my "adult life" has centered around this goal. From my job teaching children as a pilgrim at the South Shore's premier museum, Plimoth Plantation, to my work as a union organizer for Harvard graduate students, to my more recent experience drafting bills for my state representative, I have sought to use my skills - particularly my oral and written advocacy skills - to bring about change.

Since entering law school, I have continued to try to find the best ways to contribute, working for the federal court system and acting as a research assistant to professors studying critical issues. These experiences have shown me the power of a constitutional amendment to remedy large issues -- and, with the grumblings of Citizens United that inevitably overtake every law school class at some point, I have come to see the Citizens United decision as one of those issues which a constitutional amendment could help address.

I believe I possess a special set of writing, research, negotiation, and advocacy skills that would make me a valuable member of the Citizens Commission. Moreover, I would be honored to serve my community in a more formal capacity.
