Subject: Pneumatic Home elevator

My husband had a stroke a year ago, and we purchased a smaller home with most facilities he needs on the first floor. However, if his condition worsens, we plan to install an elevator. The pneumatic home elevator is the most practical home elevator on the market, but, unfortunately, Massachusetts does not recognize it as safe. Other New England states have approved it. It is economical to purchase and install, and fits into a smaller space than other elevators. Please reconsider approving it for people like my husband and me, aging (he is 82), and wanting to live in a single family home (I have a grand piano that I want to play at any hour for the rest of my life.)
