Grant Program Description

The Massachusetts Attorney General's Office (AGO) is pleased to announce the Public Health Models for Gun Violence Prevention Grant Program. The AGO seeks to fund proposals that expand the capabilities of public health organizations and professionals to implement and expand effective gun violence prevention models, interventions, and strategies. Grant-funded programs will provide training, resources, programming, and other tools to promote gun violence prevention, gun safety, targeted violence prevention, and gun violence interruption, especially for people and communities disproportionately impacted by gun violence. The AGO will prioritize proposals that are culturally-competent,¹ evidence-based, and trauma-informed.

Examples of public health models include, but are not limited to:

- (1) Interventions based on the different types of gun violence and best public health practices for prevention,
- (2) Initiatives designed to embed gun violence prevention information in health care and related public health settings (e.g., hospitals, schools, and community-based nonprofit organizations),
- (3) Training for public health organizations and professionals on specific Massachusetts gun safety-related laws, such as secure storage laws and Extreme Risk Protection Orders, and best practices for patient implementation,
- (4) Training on specific issues such as mental health, suicide prevention, intimate partner violence, and substance use as they relate to gun violence prevention,
- (5) Community violence interruption initiatives that incorporate a public health approach, such as Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT).

Grant-funded programming must be delivered by public health organizations or professionals or in health care and related public health settings, including, but not limited to, clinical settings, community violence interruption settings, school health services and programs, college medical centers, Veteran's Affairs settings, community health centers, municipal public health agencies, institutions providing behavioral or mental health support, telehealth, or any other setting offering support or services to people or communities in addressing gun violence.

¹"Cultural competence" in this instance refers to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's definition of cultural competence in health care: "the integration and transformation of knowledge about individuals and groups of people into specific standards, policies, practices and attitudes used in appropriate cultural settings to increase the quality of services; thereby producing better outcomes." Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, "Cultural Competence in Health and Human Services." See <https://npi.cdc.gov/pages/cultural-competence-health-and-human-services#3>

Gun violence prevention interventions or initiatives may involve staff or programs specifically dedicated to gun violence prevention or may be generalized violence prevention or interruption programs that include curricula on gun violence prevention and gun safety.

The grant will be funded with up to $1,000,000 from the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office.

Background

In an average year in Massachusetts, 257 people die and another 648 are wounded by guns.² In addition to the loss of life, suffering, and trauma, gun violence has an economic toll, costing Massachusetts $3.5 billion each year.³

Gun violence is unquestionably a public health issue. Public health is the science of reducing and preventing injury, disease, and death, while promoting the overall health and well-being of the population through the use of data, effective policies, and evidence-based practices. On June 25, 2024, U.S. Surgeon General Dr. Vivek Murthy issued a Surgeon General's Advisory on Firearm Violence, calling it a public health crisis.⁴ This advisory identifies a number of recommendations to reduce gun violence, including implementing and supporting community violence prevention programs and expanding access to mental health services and supports. The Attorney General recognizes that the Commonwealth's gun violence epidemic requires the widespread adoption of a range of different strategies aimed at interrupting and preventing gun-related violence. This includes ensuring that public health professionals and organizations, including health care providers, have the resources, education, and tools necessary to address gun violence with the populations they serve.

To be effective, public health approaches to gun violence interruption and prevention also must be done with appropriate consideration for the disparate impact of gun violence on specific communities. For example, in Massachusetts Black people are 4.1 times more likely than white people to die by guns and 20 times more likely to die by gun homicide.⁵ At the same time, from 2018 to 2021, 55% of gun deaths in Massachusetts were suicides. In light of the impact of gun violence on a broad range of communities and individual experiences, gun violence prevention programs should be trauma-informed and center mental well-being and cultural competence regarding the many types of gun violence and their varying outcomes and impacts. Although we recognize that gun violence is a public health and public safety issue impacting communities across the Commonwealth, public health organizations and professionals often
