Peterson receives prestigious conservation award

Mark Blazis

Last Wednesday, just as ripening cranberries were turning our coastal bogs red, and brook trout were showing spawning colors that rival our most brilliant foliage, recently retired Fish & Wildlife Commissioner and long-time legislator George Peterson became the 13th recipient of our state's prestigious Francis W. Sargent Conservation Award.

Sargent had served as director of Mass Fish & Wildlife from 1963 through 1964 and as a liberal Republican subsequently evolved into a unifying politician with a strong conservation ethic. A dean's list MIT student enrolled in its rigorous architecture program, he never let his North Shore patrician upbringing, private schooling, and Dover home life put him into bragging mode.

Known to friends as just "Sarge," he chummed with both sportsmen and classmate I.M. Pei. He often said he was from the "fin, fur and feather folks." On more than one occasion, he woke his late-sleeping, farm-dwelling hunting partner with a firing of his shotgun outside the bedroom window. His self-deprecating, wry-humored nature added considerably to his humanity, appeal and governing effectiveness.

Massachusetts' governor from 1969 through 1975 — tumultuous years when Boston was going through much strife over school busing and a shift into more modern public transportation — Sargent showed his innate sportsman's heart, fishing often at Cape Cod and fighting to end illegal netting in the commercial fishery. He saw the dunes and sea shore there much at risk to large scale commercial development and housing expansion. Before it was popular to do so, he championed clean air, clean water and open space.

Sargent was trusted by both political parties. He greatly respected science. Fittingly, he delivered the keynote address at MIT on the very first Earth Day in 1970, during which he famously posed for a picture with an experimental electric car that MIT was just developing. In his obituary, it was suggested that memorial donations be made to the Conservation Law Foundation. Sargent was special. Anyone receiving an award with his name on it is deeply honored.

Numerous luminaries from the state's outdoor world that came to celebrate the outdoors-minded Peterson included highly respected former Secretary of Environmental Affairs Bob Durand, who from 1999 to 2003 in the Cellucci administration earned a reputation for balancing the need for economic development with river and coastal resource protection, land conservation and historic preservation.

Massachusetts Audubon President Gary Clayton, a powerful and conciliatory force working to form a collaboration of sportsmen and naturalists, was also there to celebrate Peterson. Under Clayton's leadership, a Mass Audubon deer-ravaged sanctuary is now being scientifically managed with the help of our region's bow hunters. New MassWildlife Commissioner and Worcester County League of Sportsman's Clubs spokesman Ron Amidon shared his admiration for Clayton and Mass Audubon's work. When sportsmen and naturalists collaborate, they can prove unbeatable in protecting wildlife and wild land.

The diversity of attending Peterson celebrants spanned the local environmental, political and sportsman world because as a politician, Peterson chose to be unifying and constructive rather than divisive and obstructive. Everyone I know felt they could trust him to collaborate reasonably to benefit wildlife, open space and sportsmen, much in keeping with Francis Sargent's principles.

Peterson had long been a strong advocate for the Blackstone River and enhanced public access to state lands and waters. For years, he had sat on and contributed to the Natural Resources and Rules Committee. During his 2½-year tenure as commissioner of Mass Wildlife, Peterson was important in facilitating the interagency construction project of a mile-long water pipeline and hydro-power turbine supplying 6 million gallons of water daily to our Belchertown hatchery.

Secretary of Energy and the Environment Matt Beaton — a passionate sportsman in his own right — shared how Peterson kindly mentored him when he was a rookie legislator on Beacon Hill, recognizing him as "one of the most respected people in the legislature."

New Commissioner of MassWildlife Ron Amidon praised Peterson saying refreshingly, "whether you like the message or not, he'll always tell you the truth."

Accompanied by MassWildlife's current director Jack Buckley, board members Fred Winthrop, Steve Sears, Bonnie Booth and Mike Roach, Board chairman Joe Larson noted that like so many, Peterson began an illustrious career working to make a difference in local politics in Grafton way back in 1984, when he was elected to the planning board.

Along the way, Peterson has mentored many, including representative David Muradian, who won his seat and even bought his home in Grafton. Peterson will be moving with his wife Diana to Jacksonville, Florida.

Peterson promised me that he would be keeping touch with the pulse of environmental and sportsmen's issues here in Massachusetts — and always be available to help others in that work. The award Peterson received was appropriately a carved loon. No other bird better exemplifies the call of the wild in New England, which Peterson regularly voiced so protectively.

Cubs rally past Scherzer, Nationals

Anthony Rizzo looped a tie-breaking single with two outs in the eighth inning and the Chicago Cubs overcame Max Scherzer's brilliant performance to beat the Washington Nationals, 2-1, on Monday for a 2-1 lead in their NL Division Series.

Scherzer was dominant in his return from a right hamstring injury, carrying a no-hitter into the seventh. But just like in Game 1, when Chicago was held hitless into the sixth by Stephen Strasburg, the World Series champion Cubs showed off their resilience on the way to a stirring victory.

Game 4 of the best-of-five series is Tuesday. Jake Arrieta returns from his own hamstring injury for the Cubs, while Tanner Roark gets the ball for the Nationals.

Chicago committed four errors, including two by left fielder Kyle Schwarber on one ugly play, and Rizzo and Jason Heyward each made uncharacteristic baserunning mistakes. But the Cubs got a huge pinch-hit RBI single from Albert Almora Jr. and a solid pitching performance from Jose Quintana in the return of postseason baseball to Wrigley Field after last year's World Series ended in Cleveland.

With pinch-runner Leonys Martin on second in the eighth, Rizzo hit a blooper to left off Oliver Perez that found a patch of outfield grass between three Washington fielders. Rizzo stumbled after he took a big turn around first and was tagged out to end the inning, but he didn't seem to care too much, yelling and screaming as the Cubs came out of the dugout for the ninth.

All-Star Wade Davis then retired three in a row for his second save of the series. Jayson Werth popped out to Rizzo to end the game.

Twins extend Molitor through 2020

The Minnesota Twins are bringing back Paul Molitor as manager after he led a historic turnaround.

The Twins announced Monday that Molitor is getting a new three-year deal that keeps him under contract through 2020. They went 85-77 this season, becoming the first team to make the playoffs after losing at least 100 games the previous year. They lost to the New York Yankees in the AL wild-card game last week.

Molitor spent the entire season in the final year of his initial three-year contract signed in 2014. New executives Derek Falvey and Thad Levine never addressed the manager's future during the season, which saw a 26-game improvement from 2016. That led to some uncertainty about whether they would retain a manager they inherited when they took over.

But with Molitor among the front-runners for AL manager of the year, the two sides reached agreement on a new deal less than a week after the season ended.

A St. Paul native who spent the final three seasons of a Hall of Fame career with the Twins, Molitor has earned the loyalty and respect of his players with an even-keeled demeanor and impressive grasp of the game. Prior to being hired as manager, he served as a roving instructor in the Twins' minor league system, forging strong bonds with players like Brian Dozier, Miguel Sano and Byron Buxton that laid the groundwork for this season's renaissance.

The Town of Charlton Property Revaluation

Notice of Public Disclosure

The Town of Charlton has completed the Fiscal Year 2018 Triennial Revaluation of all real and personal property as required by Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 40 section 56 to achieve full and fair cash value property assessments and the Town of Charlton has received preliminary certification from the Massachusetts Department of Revenue. The proposed assessed values reflect the estimated market value of properties as of January 1, 2017 based on comparable sales with the Town of Charlton from Jan. 1, 2016 through Dec. 31, 2016. This process is completed by in depth review and analysis of arm's length property sales for the given period. While the total town taxable value has increased from Fiscal Year 2018 by ___8.0___%, the total assessed value for single family properties, the largest class, has increased by ___9.0___%.

Public disclosure

The Assessor's office provides reports of all town wide assessments for review. The FY 18 preliminary assessments are available for public review during the public disclosure period of Thursday, October 5th through Monday October 16th 2017 in the Assessor's office and the Charlton Public Library during regular business hours. Property records cards can be obtained from the Assessor's office. Please note that records cards available online will not reflect FY18 assessments until late January of 2018.

If you have any questions or would like to discuss or request changes regarding your proposed assessment, please feel free to contact the Assessor's office during regular town hall business hours Mon. Wed. Thur. 7:30am - 5pm and Tues. 7:30am - 7:00pm, CLOSED FRIDAY. Telephone 508-248-2233. The library is open Monday and Wednesday 9:30 am - 5:00pm, Tuesday and Thursday 9:30am - 8:00pm, Saturday 9:30 - 3:00pm. CLOSED FRIDAY.

Should you believe and demonstrate that the assessed value for your property does not accurately reflect the market for the period of Jan. 1, 2016 through Dec. 31, 2016 as of Jan. 1, 2017, the Assessor will review the property and make any appropriate changes during the public disclosure period prior to final certification. After the public disclosure period has ended, values will be submitted to the Department of Revenue for final certification. Upon receipt of final certification the Town can proceed with setting the FY18 tax rate.
